Master in European Economic Governance (MEEG)

LUISS

Objectives

Almost all the large and medium-sized firms operating within the EMU member states maintain stable and continuous interaction with key European institutions. This interaction can be severely hindered if firms do not have a thorough understanding of the evolution of European governance and regulatory framework. Likewise, European institutions can fail to master country-specific instruments, causing them to inadequately assess the impact of regulatory framework on the private sector.

MEEG is designed to train full-fledged economists and experts in the field of European regulation, the single market and policy. Technical and analytical skills acquired through the program help to form professionals adept at managing relations between national institutions, companies, and European institutions. MEEG differs from other master's programs in European Studies for its specific focus on economic governance.

MEEG is offered by the Luiss School of European Political Economy (SEP). SEP is a graduate school active in the field of European Economics. SEP also conducts top-level research on issues linked to European governance and policy, acting as a think tank and developing analyses and policy recommendations that influence public opinion and policy makers in both Rome and Brussels.

MEEG is supported by leading private corporations and public institutions, including Cassa Depositi e Prestiti, Poste Italiane, Ministero di Economia e Finanza, Assonime, Invitalia, Enel, TIM. MEEG is also closely linked to key European Institutions and Think Tanks, such as European Commission, the European Stability Mechanism, the European Investment Bank, Euroclear and CEPS.

Every year, several internships - sponsored by some of the aforementioned institutions - are available on a competitive basis.

MEEG is designed to provide economists and social scientists with in-depth knowledge of European institutions, concentrating on how key institutions function and thoroughly explaining economic policies and regulatory aspects of the EU and EMU. MEEG's unique focus qualifies graduates for a range of positions in public administration, Brussels-based European institutions, and private firms operating in Europe.

Participants

The program is designed for graduates in Economics or other Social Sciences as well as professionals interested in acquiring or advancing their knowledge of key aspects of European regulatory framework and policies.

Career opportunities

MEEG graduates acquire knowledge and an array of skills that can be used in a wide range of professional positions in public administration, related careers with Brussels-based European institutions, as well as private financial and non-financial corporations operating in Europe.

Classes

MEEG is a full-time program. Students are requested to attend all courses and pass all exams. Some of the exams are held in the form of term papers or presentations. Workshops, seminars and additional events accompany the lectures, along with the participation of experts from European institutions who share their knowledge and experience.

Content

The Master's program is divided into two terms. The first term focuses on providing essential analytical and macroeconomic tools, as well as an overview of the historical development and legal evolution of the EU and the EMU. In the second term, courses concentrate on the internal market of the EU and key regulatory issues, such as the regulation of banking and capital markets, corporate governance, consumer protection, energy, and the environment. Students may decide to specialize in either Policy, Market and Regulation, or Banking and Financial Markets.

Admission Requirements

Candidates need to meet the criteria of the Master Academic Regulation available on the website.

Program fees

€8,000 to be paid in two installments.
